

Code of Ethics for Spiritual Practitioners

(As subscribed to by Anima Praxis and Rev. Briana Lee)

1. Integrity and Honesty

Transparency in Service Descriptions: Provide clear, honest descriptions of services offered, including their nature, purpose, and limitations.

Truthful Representation: Never make false claims about one's abilities or guarantee outcomes that are not within one's control.

2. Confidentiality

Client Privacy: Maintain strict confidentiality of all client information and interactions, ensuring that client trust is honored.

Secure Record Keeping: Store any client records or session notes securely to protect personal information.

3. Informed Consent

Clarity on Services and Costs: Inform clients upfront about the details of services and associated fees, ensuring they have all necessary information to make an informed decision.

Agreement on Boundaries: Outline the practitioner's role, client expectations, and session boundaries prior to the first session.

4. Professional Competence

Training and Qualifications: Engage in ongoing training and maintain certifications relevant to the offered services to ensure quality and competency.

Honest Scope of Practice: Work within the boundaries of one's expertise and refer clients to other professionals if a situation falls outside those boundaries.

5. Respect and Non-Judgment

Cultural and Spiritual Sensitivity: Respect the diversity of clients' backgrounds and beliefs without imposing personal views.

Non-Discrimination: Provide services to clients regardless of their gender, race, sexual orientation, religious beliefs, or other identity markers.

6. Ethical Business Practices

Fair Pricing: Set prices that reflect the value and effort of the service while considering accessibility and fairness.

No Exploitation: Never exploit clients' vulnerabilities for financial gain or create unnecessary dependencies.

7. Commitment to Client Welfare

Prioritizing Well-being: Always prioritize the well-being of the client during and after services.

Post-Service Support: Offer reasonable follow-up guidance or resources, such as providing direction on how clients can seek further help if needed.

8. Transparent Limitations

Spiritual Guidance, Not Medical Advice: Make clear that spiritual services are not a replacement for medical, psychological, or legal advice, and encourage clients to seek additional professional help when necessary.

Managing Expectations: Help clients understand that results may vary, and any service provided is part of a personal and subjective experience.

9. Ethical Marketing

Honest Promotion: Market services without exaggeration or misleading claims. All promotional content should accurately reflect the practitioner's services and expertise.

Avoiding Manipulative Tactics: Refrain from using fear-based or high-pressure tactics to convince clients to book services.

10. Accountability

Feedback Mechanism: Provide clients with a means to give feedback or express concerns about their experience.

Willingness to Correct: If errors are made, take responsibility and make reasonable efforts to rectify any issues.
